

Gallup Strengths Workshop

Helping Teams Grow Stronger

Employees Who Use Their Strengths Are 60% More Engaged

The key to achieving success is not trying to be someone else, striving to be as good as another team member at whatever he or she does best, or aiming to become universally self-proficient. Instead, each team member must discover his or her own exceptional abilities, recognize his or her weaknesses and potential vulnerabilities, and understand how someone else’s abilities complement his or her own.

A strengths-based team is a group of imperfect but talented contributors who are valued for their strengths and who need one another to realize individual and team excellence.

When team members discover their greatest talents, they will find their greatest opportunities for strength and success.
